

Morgan,

I want to thank you for a wonderful semester. I have already expressed my feelings about the course in my personal statement, but I want to emphasize my appreciation of everything you do and have done for your students and me. Your philosophy on education and the grading system as a whole is refreshing and eye-opening. I feel that my obsession with approval and excellence has become detrimental to my health and self worth because of the emphasis on the grade. Even at the end of this semester, my body and mind are in knots in the anticipation of the final judgment that will be passed on me by my professors. And this judgment allots so much power over me. All of this might seem strange, and I am constantly faced with those who ignore my priorities; but I am a passionate person, who cares about everything as if it is a representation of who I am. Your guidance has helped me see, again, the difference between excellence and perfection in grades. Thank you for enriching my life. I look forward to working with you again.

Yours truly,
Amanda K. Hubby
